

New York Voters: Don't Be Fooled by AI

AI can create fake photos, videos, and audio that look and sound real. AI chatbots can also give wrong answers about voting. Here's how to protect yourself this election.

AI fakes can look like:

- A video of a government official giving false voting instructions.
- A message made to look like an official government notice.
- A robocall or social media post with fake audio that sounds like a real person.
- Threats meant to scare you into staying home.

Don't ask a chatbot how to vote.

AI chatbots have given voters the wrong location, wrong deadlines, and false voting requirements. Always check an official source.

Why AI fakes are hard to spot:

- They have gotten so good that they may have no obvious flaws.
- Most fake content online is not labeled as AI.
- Tools that claim to detect AI are not always accurate.

Protect yourself

- Get voting information from your board of elections.
- Be skeptical of emotional, shocking, or surprising content about the election.
- Verify any unexpected message about voting by checking official election websites or trusted news outlets.
- Don't share any information about voting unless you know it is real.
- Report suspected social media fakes on the platform where you saw them.
- Watch for false information on postcards, texts, emails, and lawn signs too.
