INTRODUCTION

During his 2024 campaign, President Trump and his campaign falsely alleged that Haitian immigrants in Springfield, Ohio had come to the United States without authorization and were eating their neighbors' pets.¹ Although officials in Springfield swiftly denied this baseless claim and made clear that the members of their Haitian population were lawfully present, in many cases on the basis of Temporary Protected Status (TPS), Trump later disputed that those TPS holders had legal status—asserting that “they may have done it through a certain little trick, but they are illegal immigrants as far as I am concerned.”² Shortly after taking office, the Trump Administration (via Secretary of Homeland Security Kristi Noem) purported to partially vacate Haiti's TPS designation without regard to the perilous conditions in Haiti and without any evidence that those conditions had improved.³ Through this unjustified and unlawful action, defendants seek to strip legal protection from a community that comprises nearly one quarter of all TPS holders.⁴

The Amici States—which submit this brief in support of Plaintiffs and to underscore that defendants’ action here were baseless, arbitrary, and contrary to the public interest—have strong interests in postponing defendants’ unlawful action pending judicial review, and ultimately in preventing that action from taking effect.⁵ The Amici States are home to thriving Haitian communities—including many individuals who are able to live and work in the United States because of TPS. Far from being a burden on or threat to our States, Haitian TPS holders provide resounding benefits to their communities and to the Amici States. They are valued employees and residents of the Amici States, and many provide important public services to the Amici States’ residents. They are homeowners and neighbors, coworkers, teachers and students, entrepreneurs and job-creators, caregivers, construction workers and union members, and parents. Stripping these individuals of legal status would harm our residents, our economies, and our public health and safety. The public interest weighs heavily in favor of granting Plaintiffs’ requested relief and postponing the vacatur and termination orders pending adjudication of Plaintiffs’ claims.

⁵ The Amici States include: the State of New York, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the State of California, together with the States of Connecticut, Delaware, Hawai‘i, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia.

BACKGROUND AND INTEREST OF AMICI STATES

In 2010, a catastrophic earthquake in Haiti killed and displaced hundreds of thousands of people, throwing the country into crisis.⁶ In response, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) designated Haiti for TPS protection in 2010, extended the TPS protection in 2011, and repeatedly issued extensions thereafter.⁷ In 2018, during the first Trump Administration, DHS attempted to terminate Haiti's TPS designation,⁸ but that decision was enjoined by a federal court and did not take effect.⁹ DHS again designated Haiti for TPS in 2021, and then redesignated and extended TPS for Haiti in 2023 and 2024.¹⁰ As extended, Haiti's TPS designation is not set to expire until at least February 3, 2026. As of September 2024, 260,790 Haitians were living in the United States with TPS.¹¹

⁷ Partial Vacatur, 90 Fed. Reg. at 10512 (describing redesignations and extensions).

⁸ Termination of the Designation of Haiti for Temporary Protected Status, 83 Fed. Reg. 2648 (Jan. 18, 2018).

⁹ See Ramos v. Nielsen, 336 F. Supp. 3d 1075, 1108-09 (N.D. Cal. 2018). A panel of the Ninth Circuit issued an opinion vacating the district court's injunction, see Ramos v. Wolf, 975 F.3d 872 (9th Cir. 2020)—but the mandate never issued and the opinion never took effect, because the Ninth Circuit granted rehearing en banc and vacated the panel opinion, see Ramos v. Wolf, 59 F.4th 1010 (9th Cir. 2023). DHS voluntarily dismissed the appeal after redesignating Haiti for TPS. See Ramos v. Mayorkas, No. 18-16981, 2023 WL 4363667, at *1 (9th Cir. June 29, 2023).

¹⁰ Partial Vacatur, 90 Fed. Reg. at 10512 (describing redesignations and extensions).

¹¹ See Jill H. Wilson, Cong. Rsch. Serv., RS20844, Temporary Protected Status and Deferred Enforced Departure 7 \(2024\).

In renewing and extending Haiti's TPS designation, DHS recognized that Haiti is experiencing severe political, security, environmental, humanitarian, and economic crises "that prevent Haitian nationals . . . from returning to Haiti in safety."¹² Among other things, the country lacks a functioning democratically-elected government to control the gang violence that has killed or injured more than 2,500 people in 2024 alone and led to an attack on the country's primary international airport by gangs.¹³ Yet DHS has purported to vacate Haiti's TPS designation without evidence that the country conditions in Haiti have improved.¹⁴

The Amici States are home to at least 283,500 Haitian immigrants.¹⁵ New York and Massachusetts are home to the second-largest and third-largest populations of Haitian immigrants in the country respectively, including an estimated 15,000 Haitian TPS holders in Massachusetts.¹⁶ At least 5,400 Haitian TPS holders live in New York City alone.¹⁷ These immigrants and their families have made meaningful contributions to our States, and our States have worked hard to welcome them. For example, ¹⁷ Jennifer Bisram, NYC Officials Call on Trump Administration to Stop TPS Rollback for Haitians, CBS News (Feb. 27, 2025).

California has allocated $10 million annually to provide legal services to TPS holders since 2018, and will continue to dedicate resources to this important community through its funding for the immigrant community as a whole—including $45 million annually to support legal services, education, and technical assistance to community organizations.¹⁸ Recognizing that obtaining a work authorization through the TPS program is a valuable avenue to self-sufficiency, Massachusetts has arranged for clinics to assist individuals in Massachusetts’s emergency assistance shelters to complete TPS applications.¹⁹ New York has also dedicated substantial resources and support to TPS holders, including by assisting with work authorization applications and connecting these TPS holders to employers.²⁰

In short, the Amici States are proud to invest in TPS holders, including specifically individuals from Haiti, and have a critical interest in ensuring that their legal status is not unlawfully revoked. Moreover, the Amici States have a strong interest in ensuring that federal agencies refrain from actions that—like those at issue in this matter—are arbitrary and capricious, discriminatory, and unconstitutional. And, in service of these interests, the Amici States have previously filed amicus briefs in other cases in support of plaintiffs challenging unlawful attempts to terminate or vacate already issued TPS designations.²¹ Most recently, the federal court in National TPS Alliance v. Noem repeatedly relied on the Amici States' brief in support of its decision to postpone the effective date of DHS's purported termination of Venezuela's TPS designation. ARGUMENT

THE PUBLIC INTEREST FAVORS PLAINTIFFS IN THIS IMPORTANT CASE BECAUSE DEFENDANTS' ACTIONS WOULD INFLICT IRREPARABLE HARM ON FAMILIES AND ON THE AMICI STATES

The Amici States support plaintiffs' positions on the pending motions to postpone the effective date of the agency action and for partial summary judgment, and on defendants' motion to dismiss. Amici write here to highlight some of the significant public interests that are at stake—which are directly relevant to plaintiffs' motion under 5 U.S.C. § 705 to postpone the effective date of the challenged agency action. See Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008) (courts must consider the public interest when determining whether to grant injunctive relief);

National TPS All., 2025 WL 957677, at *20 (court should weigh preliminary injunction factors in deciding a § 705 motion).

In cases like this one, which affect many nonparties (including the Amici States), hardship to third parties is integral to the public interest analysis. See NML Cap., Ltd. v. Republic of Argentina, 699 F.3d 246, 264-65 (2d Cir. 2012). In general, third-party harms that are relevant to the public interest analysis include harms to family members;²² economic and employment-based harms;²³ increased public health care expenses;²⁴ public health harms;²⁵ public safety harms;²⁶ and impacts to public services.²⁷ All of these cognizable harms would come to pass and affect Amici States and their residents if defendants’ action is allowed to take effect.

A. Terminating Haiti’s TPS Designation Would Separate Families, Devastate Children, and Fracture the Amici States’ Communities and Schools.

The families of Haitian TPS holders, many of whom live in the Amici States, will be profoundly harmed if defendants’ action takes effect. In 2022, approximately 87,000 U.S. citizen children and 116,000 U.S. citizen adults lived with a Haitian TPS holder.²⁸ Thus, more than 200,000 U.S. citizens lived in “mixed status” households with individuals whom DHS seeks to unlawfully strip of their legal status—and this figure does not account for the hundreds of thousands of Haitians who were newly eligible under the 2023 and 2024 designations. Terminating TPS would create extreme hardship for these households, withdrawing their members’ work authorizations and exposing them to the threat of deportation.

Compelling TPS holders to return en masse to Haiti would pose substantial dangers to many members of the Amici States’ communities. In purporting to vacate Haiti’s TPS designation, Secretary Noem did not even attempt to argue that Haiti’s conditions had improved, but instead speculated that recent developments “might result in an improvement in conditions.”²⁹ No such “improvement” has materialized to date, as evidenced by the fact that the U.S. State Department continues to classify Haiti as a “Level 4: Do Not Travel” country—its highest risk designation—warning of “kidnapping, crime, civil unrest, and limited health care.”³⁰ The Federal Aviation Administration recently extended its prohibition on commercial aircraft operations in Haiti because “[a]rmed gangs continue to control large portions of the capital, Port-au Prince, and have used small arms to fire on civilian aircraft, helicopters, airports, and related infrastructure on several occasions.”³¹

²⁸ FWD.us, Temporary Protected Status Protects Families While Also Boosting the U.S. Economy 2 \(Feb. 2024\).

Against that backdrop, revoking Haiti’s TPS designation would present current TPS holders—particularly those with U.S. citizen children, many of whom live in the Amici States—with an agonizing choice. TPS-holder parents would be forced to choose between (1) returning to Haiti alone, leaving their children behind; (2) taking their U.S. citizen children with them to a dangerous country that the children do not know; or (3) staying in the United States and retreating into the shadows, knowing that they cannot work legally and could be forcibly removed to Haiti at any time.

This harrowing dynamic would severely harm the mental health and well-being of countless U.S.-citizen children who reside in the Amici States.³² Children of undocumented parents living in the United States frequently experience persistent anxiety, driven by the constant fear that a family member may be deported.³³ This fear can profoundly shape their daily lives. For example, the New York Times recently reported on a seventeen-year-old TPS-protected Haitian girl in Columbus, Ohio, whose family is so fearful of deportation and family separation that she and her nine-year-old sister “just go to school and back, school and home”—with her sister often refusing to go to school at all.³⁴ One study found that thirty percent of Latino student participants—including students born in the United States—altered their routines due to deportation fears.³⁵ This included refraining from driving, seeking medical care, attending religious services, or participating in afterschool activities; taking a different route to school; and staying at home more often.³⁶

These harms would have ripple effects throughout the Amici States and their schools, with far-reaching and long-term consequences. Indeed, a recent profile of a

California school district noted that “fear is everywhere” and “rumors about ICE sweeps abound.”³⁷ As a result, families are “afraid to go to school.”³⁸ In Massachusetts alone, school administrators have reported thousands of absences due to fear of immigration enforcement.³⁹

When these fears materialize and families are forcibly separated, the consequences are even more severe. Parental deportation is deeply traumatic and disruptive for children: it is linked to extreme psychological distress, anxiety, depression, post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), externalizing behaviors (such as aggression), and difficulties sleeping.⁴⁰ Beyond emotional and psychological harm, these children often face additional hardships, including financial instability, housing and food insecurity, and disruptions in their education, such as increased school absences and lower academic engagement.⁴¹ Bullying related to immigration status is also common.⁴² And the long-term effects extend into adulthood. Adults who experienced parental deportation during childhood are more than twice as likely to suffer from PTSD as those who did not endure such separation.⁴³

The harms associated with the proposed TPS termination are particularly acute given the whiplash nature of the Administration's abrupt policy change. Just last year, approximately 523,000 Haitians qualified for TPS protection under the most recent redesignation, which gave these individuals assurance that they would be protected through February 3, 2026.⁴⁴ No such extension had ever before been vacated prior to the current Administration. Yet just months after DHS extended Haiti's designation, the new administration shattered the plans and prospects of countless Haitian families in the Amici States when it reversed course.

The fracturing of Haitian families would have far-reaching impacts on children, their families, and on the Amici States in which they live. The public interest strongly favors preserving the unity of these families.

B. Terminating Haiti’s TPS Designation Would Damage the Amici States’ Economies and Workforces.

The termination of Haiti’s TPS designation would also substantially harm the Amici States’ economies by depleting their workforces and depriving them of considerable tax revenue.

The Amici States employ TPS holders to perform crucial public services. For example, Massachusetts’s Department of Developmental Services⁴⁵ alone employs more than forty Haitian TPS holders, who primarily provide direct care in group home settings to some of Massachusetts’s most vulnerable populations. Haitian TPS holders also serve as personal care attendants, childcare workers, and other crucial roles in and adjacent to the Amici States’ governments. Vacating Haiti’s TPS designation—and thus stripping such individuals of their legal status and work authorization—would therefore pose serious operational challenges to the Amici States’ abilities to care for vulnerable populations such as children, elders, and developmentally disabled individuals. At minimum, the Amici States face significant costs to rehire or recruit care workers to fill such positions, because caregiving positions are challenging to fill in both the private and public sector.⁴⁶

⁴⁶ See, e.g., Katie Johnston, ‘Our Future Workforce’: How 41 Haitian Migrants Solved a Marlborough Nonprofit’s Staffing Shortage, Boston Globe (Oct. 1, 2024).

TPS holders are also crucial contributors to the Amici States' broader economies. TPS-eligible Haitians contribute $4.4 billion annually to the U.S. economy.⁴⁷ Sixty-nine percent of Haitian immigrants aged sixteen and older were members of the civilian labor force in 2022, with high rates of participation in healthcare support and service industries.⁴⁸ Moreover, a recent estimate found that 75,000 TPS-eligible Haitians work in labor-short industries, defined as those with openings for at least four percent of their workforce.⁴⁹ In Delaware, the Haitian community provides a significant contribution to the poultry industry, which is one of the State's most important sectors. Two of Delaware's leading poultry plants, Mountaire Farms and Perdue Farms, have indicated they anticipate losing almost twenty percent of their workforce due to the TPS termination. The removal of thousands of people from Delaware's poultry industry would almost certainly impact the national economy as well as food security, increasing prices and causing food shortages at grocery stores and restaurants.

As a group, TPS holders from all countries have also shown high rates of entrepreneurship—14.5 percent of TPS holders are entrepreneurs, as compared with 9.3 percent of the U.S.-born workforce.⁵⁰ The 2021 TPS population included more than 38,100 entrepreneurs, or self-employed workers, who generated $1.5 billion in business income.⁵¹ In California alone, 7,800 self-employed TPS holders generated $224.8 million in business income.⁵² These workforce contributions generate substantial state and federal tax revenue. In 2023, TPS holders from all countries paid $3.1 billion in federal taxes, contributing to programs like Social Security and Medicare, and paid $2.1 billion in state and local taxes.⁵³ In Massachusetts, New York, and California alone, TPS households earned $4.9 billion in income, paid $717.7 million in federal taxes and $588.6 million in state and local taxes, and contributed $3.66 billion in spending power.⁵⁴

Revoking Haiti's TPS designation would endanger all these economic contributions. Many current TPS holders would have no choice but to return to Haiti, taking their economic contributions with them. And those who remain in the country would be stripped of their work authorization, causing them to lose their current employment and forcing them to accept lower paying "off the books" jobs. The result would be lower wages and less productivity in the Amici States' economies. The average wage gap between undocumented and legal immigrants exceeds thirty-five percent,⁵⁵ with particularly acute impacts for undocumented women. In California, for example, undocumented women make fifty-eight cents for every dollar paid to all men, forty-four cents compared to white men, and sixty-seven cents for every dollar paid to all women.⁵⁶ Such lower-wage, unauthorized employment would also inevitably lead to a decline in tax revenues for the Amici States. Finally, at least forty-one percent of TPS households are homeowners and pay taxes on property having a total value of approximately $19 billion.⁵⁷ The Amici States would likely face a wave of mortgage foreclosures if current TPS holders are forced suddenly to leave the country or else accept lower-paid employment, thus harming property values and reducing property tax receipts.⁵⁸

The TPS-holder community, including Haitian TPS holders, comprises countless dynamic contributors to the Amici States' economies. Terminating their legal status would cause substantial harms to Amici States' economies, workforces, and tax revenue.

C. Terminating Haiti’s TPS Designation Would Compromise Public Health and Increase Health Care Costs.

Terminating Haiti’s TPS designations would also have significant negative effects on public health in the Amici States and around the country. For example, fifty-five percent of Haitian immigrants are covered by private health insurance (often through employer-sponsored insurance programs).⁵⁹ Ending work authorization for hundreds of thousands of Haitian TPS holders would deprive many of those individuals and their families of their employer-sponsored health insurance. The result would be to increase the Amici States’ health care expenditures—both by increasing the proportion of Haitian immigrants who are on public health insurance and by increasing public expenditures on emergency care provided to uninsured patients (e.g., through emergency health insurance, payments to hospitals and community health centers, and funding for public health programs).⁶⁰ Avoiding such costs is an important public interest weighing in favor of postponement.

Moreover, stripping legal status from hundreds of thousands of Haitian immigrants would risk serious negative consequences for public health and the public interest.⁶¹ As courts have noted in other contexts, the “[p]ublic health is served when

For example, the public greatly benefits when residents seek out diagnostic testing for and treatment of (or vaccination against) infectious diseases such as COVID-19, tuberculosis, and HIV.⁶² But as studies have consistently found for decades, undocumented immigrants are often reluctant to seek medical treatment due to fear of detention and deportation.⁶³ This phenomenon is so well documented that health-care providers often take significant steps to combat it—as where one clinic “placed itself right next to a Baptist church in order to prevent raids by [ICE] agents that would scare away its mostly undocumented users.”⁶⁴

Against this well-understood backdrop, stripping Haitian immigrants of lawful status (by terminating their TPS protection) would risk significant public health consequences. Many immigrants would not only lose employer-sponsored health care but would also be discouraged from seeking medical treatment of any kind due to fear of deportation. This would increase the broader community risk and would have many adverse results for individual immigrants and their families. For example, undocumented women are less likely to receive needed health care and preventive screenings than the general U.S. population—leading to significantly higher rates of conditions like cervical cancer, birth complications, neonatal morbidity, respiratory distress syndrome, and seizures for newborns.⁶⁵

And newly undocumented former TPS holders may also elect not to seek treatment for their children or other family members—who may themselves be natural-born U.S. citizens.⁶⁶ For example, studies show that children of undocumented immigrants are often sicker when seeking emergency room care and frequently miss preventive annual exams.⁶⁷ The results can be fatal, as where a child in Oklahoma died “when his parents delayed seeking medical treatment because they feared that hospital officials would report them to ICE.”⁶⁸

Because terminating Haiti’s TPS designation would strip status from a significant population of immigrants in the Amici States, and because such a shift would both raise healthcare costs and pose grave risks to public health, the public interest weighs in favor of postponement.

D. Terminating Haiti’s TPS Designation Would Harm Public Safety.

The Amici States have strong interests in effective law enforcement and protection of public safety, at both the state and local levels. Terminating Haiti’s TPS designation would make effective law enforcement and protection of public safety more difficult.

Because TPS holders and their families have built lives in the United States, some may try to stay in this country even if their TPS status is terminated. But individuals who lack legal status are less likely to report crime—even crimes in which they themselves are victims—if they “fear that [officials] will ask . . . about their immigration status” and increase their perceived risk of being removed.⁶⁹ Fear of removal, or of having a family or community member removed, makes victims and witnesses reluctant to come forward, to testify in court, and even to seek safety in a domestic violence shelter.⁷⁰ When law enforcement is unable to obtain evidence of crimes and maintain witness cooperation at trial, public safety suffers.⁷¹

Contrary to unsubstantiated contentions, recent arrivals of immigrants (including Haitians) have not led to any “crime wave.”⁷² Moreover, TPS applicants must meet specified criteria to be granted that status, including screenings for criminal history and background checks.⁷³ And conviction for certain criminal offenses can also trigger withdrawal of TPS status. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 244.14(a)(1), 244.4(a).

Terminating Haiti's TPS designations would pose challenges to jurisdictions around the country in enforcing their criminal codes and protecting public safety. The Amici States' interests in maintaining public order weigh heavily in favor of granting a postponement.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs' motions to postpone and for partial summary judgment should be granted. Defendants' motion to dismiss should be denied.
