An increasingly common scam uses the IRS name (and sometimes their phone number) to steal money and personal information from victims over the phone. Scammers will also use similar tactics via email.

How it Works
A caller impersonating an IRS official claims the victim owes back taxes and threatens arrest if the call is not answered. Often, the scammer uses caller ID spoofing to trick your caller ID box says "Internal Revenue Service," or displays the agency's phone number.

- Threaten arrest in order to intimidate the victim;
- Target immigrants and threaten deportation;
- Have information that includes your name and the last 4 digits of your social security number;
- Call repeatedly, leaving "urgent" messages and becoming increasingly threatening and insulting;
- Follow up threats with calls claiming to be local law enforcement or the Department of Motor Vehicles.

The Scammer May Also:

→ Call to demand immediate payment. The IRS provides notice in writing of owed taxes and penalties, and allows you to protest or appeal the amount owed.
→ Ask for payment information over the phone.
→ Threaten immediate arrest or deportation.

The IRS Will Never:

- Do not engage caller: instead, hang up the phone and do not return calls.
- Do not provide any personal or financial information.
- Do not wire money or provide a prepaid debit card serial number.
- Do call the IRS at their published number directly if you think you owe taxes.
- Do report the call to the U.S. Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration at (800) 366-4484 or tigta.gov.

If a Scammer Calls You:

- If a scammer calls you, be alert: they may be trying to steal your personal information.

In an alternative scam, a caller may claim you are owed a refund from the IRS and try to trick you into revealing personal identifying and financial information — which can then be used to commit identity theft.
