

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 Before: PARKER, CHIN, and CARNEY, Circuit Judges.

2

3 Plaintiff-Appellant Michael P. Kearns, the Clerk of Erie County, New York, 4 sued Governor Andrew Cuomo, Attorney General Letitia James, and 5 Department of Motor Vehicle Commissioner Mark J.F. Schroeder, alleging that 6 he could be prosecuted under federal immigration law for performing certain 7 duties under New York's Driver's License Access and Privacy Act. The United 8 States District Court for the Western District of New York (Wolford, J.) dismissed 9 the suit for lack of Article III standing, holding that Kearns had failed to plead 10 either a credible threat of prosecution for complying with the state law or an 11 injury to his office. Because compliance with the state law would not expose 12 Kearns to a credible threat of prosecution under federal law, the judgment of the 13 District Court is AFFIRMED.

14

15 KENNETH R. KIRBY, for Michael A.
16 Siragusa, Erie County Attorney, Buffalo,
17 NY, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

18

19 LINDA FANG, Assistant Solicitor General
20 (Barbara D. Underwood, Solicitor
21 General, Jeffrey W. Lang, Deputy 22 Solicitor General, on the brief), for Letitia 23 James, Attorney General of the State of 24 New York, New York, NY, for 25 Defendants-Appellees.

26

27

28 BARRINGTON D. PARKER, Circuit Judge:

29 Plaintiff-Appellant Michael P. Kearns appeals from a judgment of the 30 United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Wolford, J.)

31 dismissing his complaint for lack of Article III standing. See generally Fed. R. Civ.

32 P. 12(b)(1). Kearns is the Clerk of Erie County, New York. He sued on federal

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 preemption grounds to challenge certain of his duties under state law related to 2 processing applications for driver's licenses. The District Court concluded that 3 Kearns suffered no concrete, particularized injury because he did not face a 4 credible threat of prosecution under federal law if he complied with the 5 provisions of the state statute that he challenged. It further held that Kearns 6 failed to plead an injury to his office and that he was not a proper plaintiff to 7 litigate the claims he raised. Because we agree that Kearns lacks standing, we 8 AFFIRM the judgment of the District Court. The District Court did not reach the 9 merits of Kearns' claims; nor do we.

10 BACKGROUND

11       Though the processing of driver's licenses is governed almost exclusively 12 by state law, federal law also imposes certain requirements. In 2005, Congress
13 passed the REAL ID Act, Pub. L. No. 109-13, §§ 201-02, 119 Stat. 302, 311 (2005)
14 (codified at 49 U.S.C. § 30301 note). Among other provisions, the Act sets forth 15 minimum requirements that state-issued driver's licenses and identification 16 documents must meet if they are to confer all the privileges of REAL ID Act-17 compliant licenses, such as entering federal facilities or boarding federally 18 regulated commercial aircraft. Id. §§ 201(3), 202(a)(1).

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 To issue a REAL ID Act-compliant license, a state must verify an 2 applicant’s “lawful status” with Department of Homeland Security databases
3 and maintain copies of the applicant’s proof of that status. Id. § 202(b)-(d).
4 “Lawful status” includes citizens and lawful permanent residents, but also 5 includes certain persons who may have entered the country without pre-6 authorization, such as those with deferred action status or pending asylum 7 applications. Id. § 202(c)(2)(B); 6 C.F.R. § 37.3.

8 The REAL ID Act does not bar states from continuing to issue driver’s 9 licenses that do not comply with the Act. See REAL ID Act § 202(d)(11); 6 C.F.R. § 10 37.71(a). The Act requires states to maintain individuals’ proofs of identity only 11 when they apply for REAL ID Act-compliant licenses, see REAL ID Act §
12 202(d)(2), (11), and although the Act requires states to collect a social security 13 number or proof of ineligibility from any applicant for a compliant license, it 14 imposes no such requirement on applicants for noncompliant licenses. See REAL 15 ID Act § 202(c)(1)(C), (d)(11). Notably, the REAL ID Act does not require states to 16 verify the lawful status of applicants for noncompliant licenses. See REAL ID Act 17 § 202(c)(2)(B), (d)(11).

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1           Regardless of whether a putative applicant would be eligible for a REAL 2 ID-Act compliant license, under New York law applicants may apply for what 3 are known as “standard licenses.” In June 2019, the New York legislature enacted 4 the Driver’s License Access and Privacy Act (the “Green Light Law”) that 5 establishes certain policies and procedures related to standard licenses. 2019 N.Y.
6 Laws, Ch. 37. The Green Light Law directs the New York State Department of 7 Motor Vehicles (“DMV”) to accept various foreign documents as proof of 8 identification and age for standard licenses, and prohibits DMV from inquiring 9 about the immigration status of standard-license applicants. N.Y. Veh. & Traf.
10 Law (“VTL”) § 502(1), (8)). The law also provides that—in lieu of a social security 11 number or proof of ineligibility—applicants for a standard license may submit an 12 affidavit attesting that they have not been issued a social security number. Id. § § 13 502(8)). Standard licenses are branded as “Not for Federal Purposes.” Id.

14           The Green Light Law also restricts DMV’s retention and use of certain 15 applicant information (the “nondisclosure provisions”). For example, it prohibits 16 DMV from retaining originals or copies of the documents used by a 17 standard-license applicant to prove age or identity “except for a limited period 18 necessary to ensure the validity and authenticity of such documents,” (Id. §

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 502(8)(d)).<sup>1</sup> Except as required by federal law to renew or issue a federally
2 compliant license, the Act prevents the DMV from disclosing an applicant's 3 records or information to "any agency that primarily enforces immigration law 4 or to any employee or agent of such agency" absent a lawful court order or 5 judicial warrant. Id. § 201(12)(a). The Act also requires persons with access to 6 DMV records to certify to the DMV commissioner that they will not make such 7 disclosures. Id. § 201(12)(b)).

8 Finally, the Green Light Law requires that within three days of receiving a 9 request for information or records from federal immigration authorities, DMV 10 provide written notification to the subject of the request and inform the person 11 of the identity of the requesting agency (the "notification provision"). Id. § 12 201(12)(a).

13 Though DMV oversees the licensing of drivers, it does not issue driver's 14 licenses exclusively through its employees. In several upstate counties—15 including Erie—county clerks are responsible for issuing licenses. New York law

---

<sup>1</sup> The statute contemplates that DMV will typically conduct an automated verification of an identification document's authenticity and immediately return the document to the applicant. See N.Y. Assembly Debates on Bill A3675B, at 71-72 (June 12, 2019).

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 designates certain county clerks as agents of the DMV Commissioner and assigns 2 them discrete functions in that regard. See VTL § 205(1).

3       As the Erie County Clerk, Kearns is an agent of the DMV Commissioner.
4 State restrictions limit both Kearns' role in DMV affairs and his access to DMV
5 records. In carrying out his ministerial duties, Kearns is bound by DMV rules, 6 which address the handling of DMV records and the processing of third-party 7 requests for DMV information. Under these rules, Kearns supervises the issuance 8 of driver's licenses by members of his office but has no personal involvement in 9 the processing of license applications.

10       For example, while Kearns is allowed access to DMV systems, this access is 11 limited. Kearns may enter and retrieve information from those systems only on a 12 transaction-by-transaction basis as required to perform DMV business. Further, 13 DMV rules do not authorize county clerks like Kearns to accept subpoenas, court
14 orders, or other legal documents requesting DMV records. Instead, only DMV's 15 headquarters in Albany may do so.

16       In July 2019, Kearns, both individually and in his official capacity 17 commenced this action in the Western District of New York challenging the 18 licensing, nondisclosure, and notification provisions of the Green Light Law. He

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 named as defendants Governor Andrew Cuomo, Attorney General Letitia James, 2 and DMV Commissioner Mark Schroeder, in their official capacities. He sought 3 (1) a declaration that the Green Light Law is preempted by federal immigration 4 law, (2) an injunction against implementation of the Law, and (3) an injunction 5 preventing Cuomo and James from removing him from office for refusing to 6 comply with the Law.

7         Shortly after suing, Kearns moved for a preliminary injunction. He alleged 8 that he faced a credible threat of prosecution under the federal Immigration and 9 Nationality Act (“INA”) if he complied with the Green Light Law. His argument 10 focused on three provisions of the INA. The first was 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(1)(A)(iii), 11 which imposes criminal penalties on 12         [a]ny person who . . . knowing or in reckless disregard of the fact that an 13         alien has come to, entered, or remains in the United States in violation of 14         law, conceals, harbors, or shields from detection, or attempts to conceal, 15         harbor, or shield from detection, such alien in any place, including any 16         building or any means of transportation.

17
18         Second, Kearns referred to 8 U.S.C. § 1644, which provides that “no State 19         or local government entity may be prohibited, or in any way restricted, from 20         sending to or receiving from the Immigration and Naturalization Service 21         information regarding the immigration status, lawful or unlawful, of an alien in

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 the United States.” This provision, however, does not impose criminal or civil 2 penalties. See City of Chicago v. Barr, 961 F.3d 882, 902 (7th Cir. 2020).

3 Third, Kearns invoked 8 U.S.C. § 1373, which imposes the same
4 requirement as § 1644 and prevents states from limiting any government entity’s 5 ability to maintain information on an individual’s immigration status. Like § 6 1644, § 1373 imposes no criminal or civil penalties.

7 In August 2019, Defendants-Appellees moved to dismiss the complaint 8 under Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) and opposed Kearns’ motion for a preliminary 9 injunction. Kearns later filed an amended complaint, but the Parties agreed that 10 the amendment did not moot the outstanding motion to dismiss.

11 In November 2019, the District Court granted the motion to dismiss under 12 Rule 12(b)(1) on the grounds that Kearns failed to adequately plead Article III
13 standing. Regarding Kearns’ challenge to the licensing provisions, the District 14 Court found it dispositive that Kearns’ role in the issuance of driver’s licenses is 15 purely ministerial and concluded that he failed to plausibly allege a scenario 16 where he would have any personal interaction with a standard-license applicant 17 so as to expose him to criminal liability.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1           Regarding the nondisclosure provisions, the District Court concluded that 2           Kearns' claim to standing rested on "speculation about a series of implausible 3           events." Special App'x at 25. It observed that while Kearns is allowed access to 4           DMV systems, this access is restricted. The District Court noted that DMV rules 5           do not authorize county clerks to accept subpoenas, court orders, or other legal 6           documents requesting DMV records. The court concluded that Kearns would be 7           subject to the nondisclosure provisions only in circumstances under which a 8           person produced records suggesting he was in the country unlawfully, federal 9           authorities requested those records from Kearns personally rather than from 10          DMV's office in Albany, Kearns accepted the request despite lacking the 11          authority to do so, Kearns gleaned from the face of the request that it pertained 12          to a person present in the country unlawfully, and Kearns then refused to 13          disclose the records to federal authorities. The District Court characterized this 14          series of events as implausible and deemed Kearns' pleading insufficient to 15          demonstrate a credible fear of prosecution supporting Article III standing.

16          Regarding the notification provision, the District Court concluded that 17          Kearns "has not alleged a plausible scenario where he personally would be 18          required to notify an individual about a record request received from

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 immigration officials,” because “[a]gents of the [DMV] are not authorized by the 2 Green Light Law to provide that notification.” Id.

3 In sum, the District Court held that Kearns had failed to demonstrate a 4 sufficiently concrete threat of criminal sanction or removal from office to 5 demonstrate Article III standing.

6 This appeal followed. We review de novo the District Court’s order 7 granting a motion to dismiss for lack of Article III standing. Carter v. HealthPort 8 Techs. LLC, 822 F.3d 47, 56 (2d Cir. 2016).

9 DISCUSSION

10 I.

11 Article III of the Constitution limits the subject-matter jurisdiction of the 12 federal courts to “‘Cases’ and ‘Controversies.’” Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct.
13 1540, 1547 (2016) (quoting U.S. Const. art. III, § 2). Constitutional standing 14 doctrine, which derives from Article III, is designed “to ensure that federal courts 15 do not exceed their authority as it has been traditionally understood.” Id. More 16 precisely, it “serves to prevent the judicial process from being used to usurp the 17 powers of the political branches.” Clapper v. Amnesty Int’l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 408 18 (2013). The doctrine imposes three requirements: “The plaintiff must have (1)

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 suffered an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of 2 the defendant, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial 3 decision.” Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1547.<sup>2</sup> “The presence of a disagreement, however 4 sharp and acrimonious it may be, is insufficient by itself to meet [these] 5 requirements.” Hollingsworth v. Perry, 570 U.S. 693, 704 (2013) (quoting Diamond
6 v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54, 62 (1986)).

7       Kearns premised his theory of standing on the threat that he would be 8 prosecuted for violating the INA if he complied with the Green Light Law. In 9 general, “a plaintiff has standing to make a preenforcement challenge ‘when fear 10 of criminal prosecution under an allegedly unconstitutional statute is not 11 imaginary or wholly speculative.’” Hedges v. Obama, 724 F.3d 170, 196 (2d Cir.
12 2013) (quoting Babbitt v. United Farm Workers Nat’l Union, 442 U.S. 289, 302 13 (1979)). A plaintiff need not demonstrate with certainty that he will be 14 prosecuted under the statute to show injury, but he must demonstrate a fear that 15 is both actual and well-founded. Vt. Right to Life Comm., Inc. v. Sorrell, 221 F.3d

---

<sup>2</sup> The District Court stated that it applied an especially rigorous standing inquiry because it was asked to review the actions of another branch of government, citing Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 819-20 (1997). Nothing in the record, however, suggests that the District Court’s decision turned on the use of a heightened standard, and Kearns—who objects to the invocation of Raines—fails to identify any effect Raines had on the court’s analysis.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 376, 382 (2d Cir. 2000). We conclude that Kearns has not satisfied these 2 requirements.

3 II.

4 Kearns contends that he could be prosecuted under 8 U.S.C. § 1324 for 5 harboring, concealing, or shielding from detection aliens who entered or are 6 present in the United States unlawfully if he performed the functions he believes 7 are imposed on him by the Green Light Law. This hypothesized injury, however, 8 is conjectural, not “actual or imminent.” See Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1548; Lujan v.
9 Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992)).

10 Under the Green Light Law, Kearns’ office is responsible for issuing 11 standard licenses. The theory that issuing standard licenses constitutes criminal 12 harboring is directly at odds with federal law that expressly permits the issuance 13 of such licenses. The REAL ID Act permits states to issue noncompliant licenses 14 provided that they meet certain requirements, which do not include the 15 verification of lawful status. See REAL ID Act § 202(d)(11). Moreover, 6 C.F.R. § 16 37.71(a), promulgated by the Department of Homeland Security, permits states 17 that issue REAL ID Act-compliant licenses also to issue licenses “that are not 18 acceptable by Federal agencies for official purposes,” provided they meet certain

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 requirements. In other words, the statute and rule expressly allow New York to 2 issue standard licenses without verifying that an applicant is lawfully present in 3 the United States.

4 New York implements this provision by accepting foreign proofs of 5 identity before issuing standard licenses but then labeling those licenses “Not for 6 Federal Purposes” It is implausible—indeed inconceivable--that Congress passed 7 a law and the Department of Homeland Security promulgated a rule that, if 8 complied with, would require county clerks such as Kearns to engage in illegal 9 activity.

10 In the same vein, the REAL ID Act’s definition of “lawful status” includes 11 certain persons who may have entered the country without preauthorization, 12 such as those with deferred action status or pending asylum applications. REAL 13 ID Act § 202(c)(2)(B); 6 C.F.R. § 37.3. The REAL ID Act allows these individuals 14 to receive licenses that may be used to enter federal buildings and to board 15 commercial aircraft. Accordingly, Kearns’ argument would require us to 16 conclude that when Congress passed the REAL ID Act and authorized clerks to 17 issue federally compliant licenses to certain undocumented immigrants, it

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 simultaneously authorized the Department of Justice to prosecute those clerks 2 for doing just that.

3         The case law construing § 1324 supports our conclusion. “Harboring,” 4 within the meaning of the INA, is “conduct which is intended to facilitate an 5 alien’s remaining in the United States illegally and to prevent detection by the 6 authorities of the alien’s unlawful presence.” United States v. Vargas-Cordon, 733 7 F.3d 366, 382 (2d Cir. 2013). Proof of a violation of § 1324 requires that a 8 defendant “engage in conduct that is intended both to substantially help an 9 unlawfully present alien remain in the United States—such as by providing him 10 with shelter, money, or other material comfort—and also is intended to help 11 prevent the detection of the alien by the authorities.” Id. Examples of harboring 12 include physical concealment, arranging sham marriage ceremonies, and 13 assisting unlawfully present persons in obtaining employment, with knowledge 14 or reckless disregard of their immigration status. See United States v. Kim, 193
15 F.3d 567, 574 (2d Cir. 1999). Examples also include attempts to alert 16 undocumented immigrants to the physical approach of immigration authorities.
17 Vargas-Cordon, 733 F.3d at 380.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 But compliance with the Green Light Law does not require Kearns to do 2 anything like this. Because standard licenses bear the words “Not For Federal 3 Purposes” and, by federal statute and regulation, may be issued without 4 verifying an individual’s lawful presence in the United States, they could not be 5 used, as Kearns apparently fears, to deceive federal immigration authorities.<sup>3</sup>

6 Moreover, assuming without deciding that a driver’s license is a material 7 comfort, there is no suggestion in the complaint that Kearns would issue any 8 such license with the intention of preventing the applicant’s detection by 9 immigration authorities or police. Instead, Kearns would be acting in a purely 10 ministerial capacity, performing a duty assigned to him by his employer.<sup>4</sup> As a 11 result, he would not be subject to prosecution under § 1324.

---

<sup>3</sup> It is telling, for example, that the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service’s Form I-9, which employers must use to verify their employees’ eligibility to work, treats driver’s licenses as acceptable proof of identity but not as proof of employment authorization (i.e., they do not establish lawful presence in the United States). See Form I-9, U.S. Citizenship & Immigration Servs., <https://www.uscis.gov/i-9>.

<sup>4</sup> Kearns makes numerous references to the legislature’s intentions in enacting the Green Light Law, but it is only Kearns’ intentions that would be relevant to a § 1324 prosecution. Kearns contends that he could face conspiracy liability for implementing the Green Light Law with awareness of the legislature’s intentions. We find no support for the rule that public employees become coconspirators with legislative bodies by merely fulfilling their statutory responsibilities.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1           Section 1324 contains a mens rea requirement. It prohibits harboring only 2 when a defendant knows or recklessly disregards the fact that an alien has come 3 to, entered, or remained in the United States in violation of law. Kearns' 4 complaint, however, fails to plead any facts that would support a plausible 5 inference of knowledge or reckless disregard. Kearns does not, for example, 6 allege that he himself has ever worked at the counter in his office where he might 7 interact with applicants for standard licenses. He does not plead that he 8 personally reviews records submitted by applicants or that such records mention 9 the applicants' immigration status. As the District Court observed, Kearns "has 10 failed to plausibly allege a scenario in which he personally would be on notice of 11 a substantial risk that an individual was in the United States unlawfully." Special 12 App'x at 20. Simply put, failure to verify immigration status is not harboring, 13 especially when an individual possesses no affirmative obligation to verify such 14 status. DelRio-Mocci v. Connolly Props. Inc., 672 F.3d 241, 247-48 (3d Cir. 2012).

15           Faced with these substantial hurdles, Kearns falls back on the assertion 16 that no lawfully present person would apply for a standard license if the person 17 were eligible for a REAL ID Act-complaint license.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1           This assertion is plainly incorrect. There are a number of reasons a person
2 lawfully present in this country might apply for a standard license. For example, 3 a foreign student present on a visa would possess a foreign passport but not a 4 U.S. passport and might choose to use the foreign passport in connection with 5 his application. A person with a Global Entry card might not require an 6 additional means of identification at airports and thus prefer not to meet the 7 more onerous requirements of the application for a REAL ID Act-complaint 8 license. A lawful resident who is ineligible for a social security number might 9 find it easier to complete an affidavit attesting to his ineligibility than to request a 10 formal letter of ineligibility from the Social Security Administration. In sum, 11 there are abundant explanations for an individual's choice to obtain a standard 12 license. Merely applying for a standard license does not put a clerk—particularly 13 one who does not interact with applicants for licenses—on actual or constructive 14 notice of the applicant's immigration status. Suffice it to say that Congress did 15 not believe that applying for a standard license provided such notice because it 16 expressly authorized the issuance of these licenses.

17           Moreover, the REAL ID Act of 2005 postdates the 1986 enactment of § 1324 18 by 19 years. See Pub L. No. 99-603, § 112, 100 Stat. 3359 (1986) (codified at 8 U.S.C.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 § 1324). We have little difficulty concluding that Congress must have believed 2 that § 1324 did not impose the requirement that state officials verify the lawful 3 presence of driver’s license applicants; otherwise, the REAL ID Act would have 4 been superfluous. Kearns does not plausibly allege that § 1324 imposes a duty to 5 verify the lawful status of driver’s license applicants and therefore lacks a 6 credible fear of prosecution under the statute.

7       The anti-harboring provision of § 1324 has been on the books in its current 8 form since 1986. See id. Kearns does not identify a single instance in the 9 intervening period where a county clerk was prosecuted for issuing a driver’s 10 license without verifying an applicant’s immigration status or for issuing a 11 driver’s license to an undocumented person. Cf. Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 508 12 (1961) (holding that the threat of criminal enforcement was wanting when 13 Connecticut had chosen not to enforce a statute for many years). Kearns’ inability 14 to do so is telling. The government’s unwillingness or inability to prosecute a 15 single county clerk for not verifying an applicant’s immigration status in the 34 16 years that § 1324 has prohibited harboring is a “reason to conclude that no such 17 intent [to prosecute] exists.” Tweed-New Haven Airport Auth. v. Tong, 930 F.3d 65,

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 71 (2d Cir. 2019); see also Poe, 367 U.S. at 508.<sup>5</sup> For these reasons we conclude that 2 Kearns lacks standing to challenge the licensing provisions.

3 III.

4 Kearns also lacks standing to challenge the nondisclosure provisions of 5 the Green Light Law. He argues that these provisions violate 8 U.S.C. §§ 1373 6 and 1644, which impose a variety of prohibitions on states' attempts to restrict 7 the flow of information to federal immigration authorities. However, Kearns 8 cannot allege a credible threat of prosecution under these provisions because, 9 among other reasons, neither of them imposes any criminal or civil penalties and, 10 consequently, he would have no stake in the outcome of a legal challenge. See, 11 e.g., Thole v. U.S. Bank N.A., 140 S. Ct. 1615, 1619 (2020) (requiring a concrete stake 12 in the outcome of a lawsuit); Babbitt, 442 U.S. at 299 (explaining that a party lacks

---

<sup>5</sup> Citing to Tweed, Kearns argues that where a statute specifically proscribes conduct, standing doctrine does not place the burden on the plaintiff to show an intent by the government to enforce the law against him. Rather, "intent to enforce the law is 'presumed . . . in the absence of a disavowal by the government or another reason to conclude that no such intent exists.'" Appellant's Br. at 25 (quoting Tweed, 930 F.3d at 71). Tweed, however, does not assist Kearns. That case involved an airport's challenge to a law that explicitly prohibited the airport from extending its runway. There was no question that the conduct the airport sought to engage in was proscribed by the statute; it was the conduct the statute was enacted expressly to prohibit. Tweed, 930 F.3d at 69.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 standing to raise a pre-enforcement challenge when prosecution under a statute 2 is impossible).

3         Kearns also contends that complying with the nondisclosure provisions of 4 the Green Light Law would expose him to prosecution under § 1324, again 5 claiming that obeying state law would constitute harboring. This argument is 6 unavailing. Kearns fails to allege any role he would, or could, play in the 7 implementation of the nondisclosure provisions. Although New York law 8 empowers Kearns to act as an agent of the DMV Commissioner in the issuance of 9 driver's licenses, it does not allow him access to DMV records except for the 10 purpose of issuing licenses. More pointedly, it does not permit him to respond to 11 subpoenas or requests for information from federal authorities; only DMV's 12 central office in Albany may do so. And Kearns does not allege that he performs 13 any role in maintaining DMV records or conducting other DMV business.
14 Because Kearns bears no responsibility for implementing the nondisclosure 15 provisions, he lacks standing to challenge them.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup> Although the Green Light Law might require Kearns to certify that he will not disclose DMV records to federal immigration authorities and such a certification could constitute a modicum of responsibility for implementing the nondisclosure provisions, existing DMV policies do not permit Kearns to make such disclosures. See Joint App'x at 178 (DMV Policy on Requests for Information from External Entities). As a result, his certification would be of no moment. And

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1           Although the Green Light Law prohibits Kearns' office from retaining 2 proofs of identity for longer than necessary to determine their validity and 3 authenticity, the failure to retain such documents does not threaten Kearns with 4 prosecution. To hold otherwise would be to hold that county clerks may be 5 prosecuted under § 1324 anytime their office fails to retain indefinitely 6 documents used to establish applicants' identities. Nothing in the text or history 7 of § 1324 suggests that it imposes any requirement regarding the maintenance of 8 local government records.<sup>7</sup> Additionally, as with his claim regarding the 9 licensing provisions, Kearns has failed to allege that in implementing the again, Kearns fails to allege that he would sign such a certification with the requisite mens rea. Finally, Kearns has not alleged that anyone has asked him to sign such a certification.

---

<sup>7</sup> It is true that 8 U.S.C. § 1373 bars any person or agency from prohibiting or restricting local government entities from maintaining information regarding the immigration status of any individual. However, the provision does not impose civil or criminal penalties, and therefore, Kearns does not face a fear of prosecution under § 1373 for failing to maintain such information. Additionally, the provision's mandate is directed at those who prohibit the maintenance of information (e.g., state legislatures) rather than those who, in their ministerial role, fail to maintain such information pursuant to state policy (e.g., Kearns). Finally, § 1373 was enacted in 1996—ten years after § 1324—and is best read as prohibiting conduct that was not within § 1324's existing prohibition on harboring. See Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 642, 110 Stat. 3009 (codified at 8 U.S.C. § 1373). Although the REAL ID Act requires states to maintain copies of individuals' proofs of identity for various periods of time, REAL ID Act § 202(d)(2), this requirement does not apply to standard licenses, id. § 202(d)(11).

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 nondisclosure provisions he would possess the requisite mens rea: i.e., knowledge 2 or reckless disregard of an individual’s unlawful presence and an intent to shield 3 him or her from detection. Consequently, he lacks standing to challenge the 4 nondisclosure provisions.

5       Finally, Kearns lacks standing to challenge the notification provision 6 because it does not apply to him. That provision requires “the commissioner [to] 7 notify the individual about whom . . . information was requested [by federal 8 immigration authorities].” Green Light Law § 2(12)(a) (emphasis added). No 9 provision of New York law authorizes or requires Kearns to provide any such 10 notification. Tellingly, he admits that “[he] is not personally responsible for 11 issuing notifications.” Appellant’s Br. at 39. Kearns does not allege that he has 12 ever received a request that triggered a § 201(12)(a) notification. He does not 13 allege that any such request is forthcoming. And he does not allege that he 14 expects to provide written notification to any standard license applicant under 15 that provision. With no role to play in issuing notifications, Kearns could not be 16 prosecuted for doing so. As with the licensing and nondisclosure provisions, 17 Kearns lacks standing to challenge the notification provision.

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 IV.

2 Finally, Kearns claims that in addition to the risk of prosecution if he 3 complies with the Green Light Law, he faces the risk of removal from office if he 4 disobeys the law. Unlike the threat of prosecution, which conveys standing if it is 5 not “imaginary or wholly speculative,” Hedges, 724 F.3d at 196, the threat of 6 removal from office is evaluated under Clapper’s more restrictive standard, 7 requiring that a prospective injury be “certainly impending,” 568 U.S. at 409, as 8 opposed to “merely speculat[ive],” id. at 411.

9 The threat that Kearns will be removed from office is speculative. It is 10 based solely on his assertion that “Governor Cuomo has publicly refused to 11 assure County Clerks that he would not remove them from office if they decline 12 to follow the Green Light Law.” Joint App’x at 196 ¶ 18. New York law gives the 13 governor wide executive authority over county clerks. See N.Y. Const. art. XIII, § 14 13(a). Nothing in New York law requires the governor to extend the assurances 15 Kearns wants. Standing is not achieved because a governor has refused to assure 16 a subordinate official that he will or will not take a particular action. As noted, 17 Kearns does not face a credible threat of prosecution for compliance with the

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 Green Light Law. Disagreement with, or disobedience to, such a law does not 2 create a justiciable case or controversy. See Hollingsworth, 570 U.S. at 704.

3 V.

4 For largely the same reasons that he lacks standing in his individual 5 capacity, Kearns lacks standing in his official capacity. Kearns claims that his 6 office would be injured if he were prosecuted for harboring, but as explained 7 above, Kearns does not face a credible threat of prosecution. Moreover, the 8 Clerk’s Office itself faces no threat of prosecution because § 1324 applies to 9 “person[s],” not government entities. In Return Mail, Inc. v. U.S. Postal Serv., the 10 Court noted the “longstanding interpretive presumption that ‘person’ does not 11 include the sovereign” or government agencies. 139 S. Ct. 1853, 1861-62 (2019).
12 For these reasons, we conclude that Kearns lacks official-capacity standing.<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> Kearns raises on appeal an argument that was not presented to the District Court: that he has standing because complying with the Green Light Law would violate his oath of office, which requires him to uphold the Constitution of the United States. In accordance with our usual practice, we decline to address arguments not raised below. See, e.g., Otal Invs. Ltd. v. M/V CLARY, 673 F.3d 108, 120 (2d Cir. 2012).

19-3769-cv
Kearns v. Cuomo

1 CONCLUSION

2 We have considered Kearns' remaining arguments and find them to be 3 without merit. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the District Court is 4 AFFIRMED.